To whom it may concern,

My daughter Jennacy Walters has been working very hard in summer school and credit recovery classes to correct a very unfortunate start to her high school career. Her dad and I divorced the summer before her Freshman year and that left us to live with family for a short time while we arranged a permanent home. That temporary circumstance ended up lasting several months into the school year. Even as we transitioned into our permanent home, the changes were distracting and emotionally overwhelming for everyone. Jennacy has been a student athlete for her entire school career, and she has thrived with sports as her motivation and outlet. It has been so unfortunate to find Jennacy is just .25 of a credit away from getting to participate in a sport she loves and to also continue that motivation sports provides her. I hope you will consider allowing her to participate in volleyball while she continues to work on recovering her credits. Thank you.

Dear OSAA,

Family separation and moving from home to home was not the ideal situation for a upcoming freshmen. The last year and a half I have been taking summer school and credit recovery classes to make up for my stressful and unorganized freshmen year. I'm currently only short .25 of a credit after completing on semester of physical science, two semesters of English 9 and currently in an extra algebra class to make up for my lack of credits received my freshmen year.

I have been a student athlete my whole life and it is upsetting that this .25 of a credit is holding me back from doing something I love. I will continue to work hard to reach my goal and have great success in both school and athletics. It would be so greatly appreciated if I could be given the opportunity to attend volleyball this season to help keep me motivated in the right direction.

Sincerely,

Jennacy Walters
