

To whom it may concern:

As Camron Newman's father I have had to make some really difficult decisions for his future. Two years ago Camron was forced to move to Sheridan, Oregon from Salem to live with his mother against his will. Now his mom is abandoning him for the second time in his life and moving to Colorado. I am forced to consider what is best for him and his continued development. My wife and I have decided to move back home to Mill City from Salem in January 2016 to be closer to 3 of our children that live with their father and try to make our family closer. However we did not want to change Camron's school twice in his freshman year of high school and have him get behind. Camron had a choice to attend another school(in Salem) until we actually move to Mill City and he chose to live with his grandmother so that he would not be changing schools twice. He would be playing basketball with his brother, it's where I(his father) went to school and we will have a closer tight nit family. Camron loves basketball. He chose not to play other sports this year so he would not be injured for basketball season. He did not know he was going to be moving to Mill City at that time or that he might not be able to play if he moved; or his choices would have been different. I think that Camron changing towns, schools, friends, and losing his mother is a big change for him his freshman year and I believe that basketball will give him the incentive to continue to be the amazing young man he is, and to continue to do his very best in his studies.

Sincerely,

Wayne Newman
