Subject: hardship decision

Hi Peter,

In response to your phone call, we did deny a hardship from Columbia Christian at our league meeting yesterday. I apologize that you didn't receive the correct paperwork from us for that. It was honestly a very difficult call for us and we had one member vote yes, another vote no and the 3rd took some time to decide which way to go. Speaking in solidarity, our reasons were:

- 1) The decision felt pushed upon as we normally have a policy that we send out paperwork a couple of weeks in advance of a hardship meeting and two of the three of us didn't know about the hardship until the meeting.
- 2) We believed that, although the young man was around some bad stuff going on at Madison High School that he possibly could have chosen to hang around with a different, more positive group of young people. We didn't feel he was forced out of the school but rather chose a different school and to us that made the hardship borderline.
- 3) We had questions that weren't answered in the materials we were given that raised enough red flags to tilt the committee to turn down the hardship request.

Let me know if you need more information from me.

Thanks,
Grant

OSAA and League Officials,

December 18, 2015

As parents of Levi Morris, we are writing on his behalf, requesting a hardship be granted that would allow him to compete in basketball (and any other sport) for the 2015-2016 school year.

Levi is adopted. His birth mom turned 16 the day before he was born, his birth dad was 17. He is African-American, from Miami. We have had a bit of contact with both birth parents, and Levi went with us to meet them in August of 2014. We believe he had- virtually his whole life- imagined this would turn out in some wonderful way, somehow thinking there was this perfect Florida family waiting for us to give him back. The reality was they had both moved on, both married someone else and had families- had kids they had kept, kids they had not put up for adoption. And we came back to Oregon. Diane and I had known this, had prepped Levi for it, but his imagination kept him from believing us. Anyway, that is what we think might have gone on inside him.

Adopted kids normally have Reactive Attachment Disorder, which Levi was diagnosed with several years ago. We have worked to help Levi understand he is loved by us, and loved by God. He has struggled to feel accepted and loved, more readily feeling rejected and judged. Being the only black youth in the all white rural community of Dufur only made it easier to feel different. While he had friends in Dufur, he always wondered how real the friendship was, too often sensing that when any racial issues came up he was somehow victimized.

We had long felt we should find a way to put him around other African-Americans, but had never done anything significant about this. This past June we moved to Portland for this purpose, had him participate in a full month of Urban League (a program in North Portland for black youth, designed to help these youth get started on a promising career path), and enrolled him in Madison High School, well known for its racial diversity. He did meet many black youth, made friends with some, and learned how to socialize with those of his race. However, he also found he was in an environment he was not prepared for, one he struggled with mightily. At Madison he was regularly approached with some drug request, pressured to use marijuana or other drugs. It seemed to him just about everyone there used. He smelled it in the restrooms, on other students, thought kids were high all around him.

The small and, to him, oppressive, atmosphere in Dufur was at least safe, but at Madison he did not feel safe. We think he felt he had to be watching out all the time, that no one had his back, especially after he realized that players on the Madison basketball team were not really in his corner. He thought they would become his friends, but instead, from them he felt disrespect, intimidation, and though he would never use this word, maybe even bullied. He had played with them during summer league and fall ball, but then quit basketball soon after tryouts began in November. Watching how he behaved around them, we believe he never felt he could be Levi around them, choosing to mostly be invisible. We don't have this sorted out properly, but just know that he was not ready for all that being in a large city school meant.

Along the way we had him see a therapist to help with this adjustment. One observation of this counselor was that Levi needed basketball opportunities, as that was the one thing he loved and felt good about. We fully agree with this assessment, and grieved when we saw basketball at Madison was not to be. Levi had earlier told us of his fears and struggles at Madison, and had asked to be able to go to a smaller school. We had begun to look at this. Columbia Christian is close to where we live, and virtually across the street from Multnomah University, where his older brother attends. Diane and I met with the principal and family life director, and liked what we saw. We had Levi do a visit, and he liked it as well, feeling accepted and safe. We made the decision to move him as soon as possible, withdrawing him from Madison December 17th and enrolling him at Columbia Christian Academy December 18th. We are asking that he be granted permission to participate in sports there immediately.

Thank you so much,

Jeff and Diane Morris

Dear OSAA and League Officials,

My name is Levi Morris, and I have just transferred to Columba Christian from Madison high school. I'm writing this letter in hope of being granted eligibility to play basketball this year. At three months I was adopted from Miami, Florida to Dufur, Oregon. I am African American and my adoptive parents are white. I grew up in an essentially all-white town. I often felt different and hated on by a lot of people. In June, we moved to Portland in hope of finding a school with more diversity. We did find diversity which was great, but I guess I was not prepared for going from a small rural school (Dufur High School) to a large city school.

In Dufur, even though I felt like I was separated from kids, I didn't feel physically threatened. At Madison High School, I have never felt more physically and emotionally threatened in my life. I felt like if I had stayed at Madison I would have probably gotten in to some type of drug use because drugs are a normal thing that students do there. Almost daily I was asked either if I had any pills or weed, or if I wanted to smoke any weed. Sometimes they didn't take no for an answer and just kept asking me. My hope was to play on the basketball team at Madison. I was trying out for the team and had played with the players during summer and fall. The school environment wasn't really a good environment in general. While I was at Madison high school a student managed to set the boys bathroom on fire four times forcing all 1000 students to evacuate the school. One of those incidents included a written threat, using the term "ISIS". On another occasion a threat was received of someone coming to the school on a particular day to shoot it up with guns.

I love the game of basketball but constantly having teammates harp on me on the court and give me dirty looks off the court would make me feel lonely and sad. I would try to be the nicest type of person to them but nothing would seem to get them to appreciate or respect me. Not really having a connection with the players made me not even want to play. Not feeling safe in the school made me worried about going there.

In Dufur, being the only black kid in school, basketball was my place to belong, to be of some importance. Maybe that is bent a bit, but it was the one place I could feel a valuable part of something. I had hoped for the same at Madison.

From my first experience in a visit at Columbia Christian I felt able to relax, not have my guard up all the time. I am excited about this new chance at a smaller, safer, kinder school. I hope you allow me to participate in basketball.

Thanks, Levi Morris
