Last summer I had planned to join ORCA and it took us awhile for me to actually get enrolled because we didn't have all of the paperwork I needed to actually enroll. So for 3 weeks I was getting assignments stacked up. My math class was also a problem because they didn't have the right math class for me, so I got switched around a lot before I was actually in one permanently.

So I got signed up late and by the time I was going I had a good amount of overdue assignments to catch up on. Then in November we moved to Lafayette, during the move for a while I didn't have internet to go on and get any assignments done. Since I wasn't getting anything done the amount of overdue assignments went up even more. Since it was so close to the end of the semester I worked with some of my teachers to get caught up so I'd pass the semester. My history teacher told me to work on the classes I needed to pass and that's what I did. I passed all of the classes that I needed to pass.
